ABSTRACT

The first section of the handbook lists clinics, centers, schools, and camps (both public and private facilities) offering services for emotionally disturbed children in Massachusetts and nearby areas. Descriptive information for each facility includes: location, director, type and number of clients, services offered, professions represented on staff, trainee policy, fees, visiting provisions, and summary of general purpose. The second part of the handbooks lists public school programs for emotionally disturbed children and children with learning disabilities, describing behavior problems served, number of classes, sex distribution, educational services, and teacher-student ratio. # INTRODUCTION

In the two and a half years since the publication of the first edition of this handbook the number of resources for children and adolescents with behavioral disturbances has more than doubled. The biggest change has been in the number of public school classes. Throughout this growth period there has been little evidence of planning, coordination or integration. The ten largest cities in the state still lag seriously behind suburban communities both in the development of special classes and of supportive services. With few exceptions, the thoughtful development of comprehensive educational services has been confined to communities that spend relatively more money on education and that get relatively more state and federal support. Although it is obviously an oversimplification, there would appear to be a strong relationship between local investment in education and local share of state and federal funds. The inevitable conclusion to be drawn from this is that these funds not only do not contribute to change, but tend to reinforce existing unequal opportunities.

Although there are plans for mental health centers to service lower income communities, there is little action in that direction at the present time. A few centers and clinics have and are changing their programs, staffing patterns, procedures, personnel and locations in order to better service a more varied population. But the traditions and practices of professional personnel and agencies are strongly steeped in assumptions and values which limit services and theoretical understanding. The servicing of poor people and disenfranchised minorities is only part of the problem. The more serious dilemma for professions whose traditions are value-specific is that theoretical growth will always be severely stunted if the objects of understanding and treatment are strongly tied to socio-cultural factors. It would appear that such a connection has been well established by Hollingshead and Redlich and others. Although there are certain physical disorders, such as bone fractures, which appear to require the same treatment, disregarding social class (but not disregarding age,) most diseases and disabilities have obvious social class correlates to etiology and to treatment.

There have been a number of regional efforts by school systems usually totally supported by federal funds, occassionally with some state funds. Some of these have specifically attended to special education, the assumption being that most communities do not have large enough numbers of disabled children to warrent comprehensive programs. However, this has not gone very far and there is little indication that services will be integrated or extended on a regional basis. Active state leadership is clearly needed for the establishment of minimal standards. The numbers, salaries, organization and isolation of state special education consultants counterindicates this.

Categorizing agencies continues to be very precarious. Our meager attempts in this Handbook are not too convincing and of limited use. Diagnosis, treatment, education and follow up mean different things when reported by different agencies. The names of agencies are often totally misleading-- such labels as home, center, clinic, school, guidance and hospital do not communicate what services are offered or to whom they are offered. The distinction between public and private is particularly misleading because many public agencies are not really open to the public (as is the case with the public schools where there has to be space for all school age children) and many private agencies are almost completely supported by public funds, as is the case with many so called "750" schools. Many agencies report educational services but it turns out that this consists of volunteer tutors who operate without professional educational supervision-- this for children who are typically in trouble with schools.

In light of these dilemmas it is reasonable to question the value of this Handbook. Our experience with the first edition has been that it is a beginning to gaining understanding of agencies and the children they treat and educate. The contradictions, confusions and redundancies are a very real part of the educational enigma that is, at the same time, a cause of further confusion and a reflection of professional and political reality. If we knew more about what we are about-- who are the best clinicians and teachers, which are the best methods and schools, and what are the potentials for change-- then it would be possible to categorize more clearly and meaningfully. However, the response from agencies throughout Massachusetts has been incredible. Over 95% response rate for such a survey is certainly an indication of strongly felt needs for roughly comparable information across agencies. We have been impressed by agency cooperation, but even more, we could not have updated and expanded the Handbook without the reinforcement which it provided, and the need that it implied.

Partial support for this edition was provided by the New England Materials and Instruction Center (NEMIC), Special Education Department, Boston University, as a part of its own efforts to facilitate communication about handicapped children. Dr. Harold Ruvin, director of NEMIC, has consistently encouraged our efforts. Nancy Warren, Shirley McClelland and Glenn Odenbrett have tenaciously stayed with it throughout the year and are responsible for many improvements in the format.

VI. Summary of General Purpose:
"Bristol Acres School, Inc. is a non-profit, charitable residential treatment center for emotionally disturbed boys and their families. It was established in the Fall of 1966 by community mental health professionals from Boston, Columbia, and Harvard Universities. The program combines a service role for culturally disadvantaged and delinquent children between the ages of 11 and 17 with the tasks of developing new and challenging methods of intensive care and professional and subprofessional training. The development and training functions of Bristol Acres School are seen as crucial in view of the continuous alarming rise of delinquency and serious emotional impairment in disadvantaged groups, the infrequency of competent facilities, and the growing shortage of experienced and well-trained personnel. Because of these needs, Bristol Acres School has made a major investment in building a prototype activity which develops, evaluates, and broadcasts significant modes and approaches in comprehensive treatment and special education."

VI. Summary of General Purpose:

"The teaching staff is composed of persons fully qualified as classroom teachers who are experienced in working with elementary-school age children and is under the supervision of the Headmaster, Dean E. Roberts. In addition, all the Language Therapists have been trained at the Mass. General Hospital Language Clinic. They use alphabetic-phonetic techniques in reading, writing and spelling. The regular classroom teachers modify their instruction in the arithmetic, social studies and science classes to meet the needs of the children whose diagnosis is technically known as developmental dyslexia. The teacher-student ratio is exceedingly low. Music, art and woodworking are an integral part of the school day as is an athletic program. Sports for the boys are played at Newton Y.M.C.A. using the gymnasium and indoor pool there. The athletic schedule for girls is somewhat less strenuous. Field trips are scheduled frequently and are correlated with the academic program." (from school brochure)

VI. Summary of General Purpose:

"Devereux is a special education residential and day school for boys and girls. The program content has been specifically prepared to meet the needs of the emotionally disturbed, socially maladjusted and minimally retarded child. The services of a multidisciplinary crisis intervention team are an integral part of the program. Classes are conducted on a non-graded basis for children of elementary and junior high school levels. The educational approach is remedial in substance with a strong tutorial component. Emphasis is placed upon individual attention to student needs in subject areas. Classes are necessarily small to intensify individual interaction."

VI. Summary of General Purpose:

"The Kingsley School was founded in 1938 by Edith Kingsley Simms and Helen F. Loud. In its thirty years the central aim of the School has always been to help the child of normal intelligence who is an underachiever or whose progress is hindered by a specific reading or language disability. Its program combines features of a reading clinic and a small private school for the first eight grades. Because of the clinical emphasis, the School has almost a double staff: the classroom teaching staff of six and the remedial reading staff of five."

children. At admission all children reside in the group facilities prior to placement in a foster home, where the parents have been trained by the staff to work with such children. Throughout the child's entire stay in the program, treatment is made available to him in casework, therapeutic education and psychotherapy. The child is maintained in the open community, attends public school, and participates, as appropriate, in various types of outside activities. The ideal goal is to return the child to his family whenever feasible, and when this is not possible to arrange for long-time care either within the Merrifield program or through referral to another agency."

VI. Summary of General Purpose:
"Our Lady of Lourdes School is a therapeutically-oriented setting for 80 girls between the ages of 12 and 17 who have had difficulty in adjusting at home, school or in the community. The Sisters of the Good Shepherd have specialized in work with the delinquent and emotionally disturbed girl and their basic philosophy is that of rehabilitation. They, together with lay personnel, guide the girl's relationships with her peers, help her develop a new experience with and trust in adults, and aid her in resolving personal and family problems which were operative in her previous difficulties. Our Lady of Lourdes School is a non-profit organization duly incorporated on Dec. 22, 1896 under the laws of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, and permits the acceptance of girls from public and private agencies in the state and other neighboring states. The school offers a comprehensive program to provide for the emotional, educational, recreational, vocational, spiritual, medical and cultural needs of the child."

VI. Summary of General Purpose:

"Pineland Hospital and Training Center is maintained by the State of Maine to offer three types of services to people of Maine. The first is the diagnosis, training, education and treatment of persons with retardation syndrome. A second purpose is the care and treatment of mentally ill children between the ages of 6 and 16. A third program includes out-patient clinic services. As a hospital and training center, with its clinics, Pineland has certain facilities which have been developed to provide services which cannot be provided elsewhere in Maine. It is not designed as a replacement for services which communities can provide, and it is not a boarding or nursing home. It is not a welfare facility and cannot be used to solve financial problems. Its trained staff and special treatment and training programs are available to do a specific job - to provide services for the mentally retarded and for emotionally disturbed children and their families. Our concern extends to diagnosis, treatment and, also, to prevention."

VI. Summary of General Purpose:

"Pine Ridge sees each boy as a unique individual with unrealized potential. This uniqueness must be deeply respected and valued in order to free him to explore the ideas, materials, and resources of his world. Furthermore, it is our belief that self-knowledge and attendant self-respect must precede academic growth and that real learning occurs only when knowledge can be related to one's own experience. For the boy who has near average, average, or above average intelligence potential and who is emotionally sound, but who has encountered difficulty in school because of a specific learning disability this has particular significance.
"The child who has experienced frustration and failure in his past educational encounters must be released from his sense of unworthiness, fear of failure, and feelings of hopelessness. The individual's perception of himself in an ordered, non-threatening situation is more valid than any outside judgment can be. When he is no longer on the defensive and is freed from self-doubts, he can begin to be responsible for his own growth as a man. In our view responsibility means simply the ability to respond creatively and constructively to one's world.
"Finally, it is our unshakable conviction that every human being has a right to knowledge, that this right has been denied, for the most part, to the boy with a learning disability, and that Pine Ridge School must be dedicated to the proposition that such a condition need not persist."

VI. Summary of General Purpose:

"The primary purpose of the School is to provide a residential treatment program for emotionally disturbed boys. However, an attempt is made to provide varied services in response to an individual's identified need rather than to limit service to a specific function. Accordingly, the School offers specialized foster home care to those children who could benefit from family life which otherwise they could not enjoy without the provision of intensive special services. Additionally, the School has maintained a continuity of professional services to social agencies carrying responsibility for the child once he has been discharged from the direct responsibility of the School.
"A secondary purpose of the School is to offer its program to the community as a training resource insofar as a training program does not affect adversely the quality of service offered to the child.
"A third purpose of the school would include research."

The primary geographical area served is the northern position of the Boston University catchment area (Back Bay and South End.) A variety of consultative and outpatient evaluation and treatment approaches is being made available to the population. Close liason with existing agencies is planned, including actual clinical work in a social agency in the South End. Consultative and clinical programs geared to METCO children, their families and suburban schools, and to two local secondary schools are in operation. The training of professionals remains an important community contribution and adds weight to the need to maintain high clinical standards in traditional and innovation undertakings."

VI. General Summary of Purpose:

"Valley View Farm is a specialized facility for the treatment and education of adolescent boys who are experiencing difficulty in their relationship with their family, peers, school, or community to a sufficient degree to prevent their functioning in their home setting. The newly re-designed physical plant is situated in the rural central New England town of North Brookfield and encompasses 135 acres of timberlands and fields suitable for outdoor activities and sports. An individualized program is designed for each boy. This is determined by his educational and emotional needs based upon a high level of interaction with a competent professional staff. Admission is limited to 19 boys between the ages of 13 and 16 who may demonstrate a wide range of behavior problems. Boys may be considered for admission who are of at least average intelligence, not overtly psychotic, and free of physical handicaps."
